

Have you experienced domestic abuse from a female intimate partner?

We want to hear about your experience.

PhD Research Project

Exploring the support experiences of men who have disclosed domestic abuse to family and friends

I am a PhD researcher at the University of Wolverhampton and I am looking to hear from men who have experienced domestic abuse from a current or former female intimate partner, and who have spoken to a family member and/or friend about what they experienced.

Domestic abuse can take many different forms, including (emotional, psychological, financial, controlling and/or physical abuse). My research is not limited to experiences of physical abuse.

Men's experiences matter.

What is the research about?

The study explores how family and friends responded when men disclosed their experiences, what support they received, and whether those responses influenced any later decisions to disclose to others or seek professional support.

What does participation involve?

An anonymous online questionnaire which takes approximately 15–20 minutes to complete.

You will not be asked to describe the abuse itself in detail.

Who can take part?

Men who:

- have experienced domestic abuse from a current or former female intimate partner,
- have spoken to a family member and/or friend about what they experienced,
- are 18 years or over.

Take part here:

Scan the QR code or visit the link below:

<https://app.onlinesurveys.jisc.ac.uk/s/uow-survey/malevictimsdisclosure>

Your experiences can help create change.

Together, we can build a better understanding of men's experiences and help inform more inclusive support and services.

Thank you for considering taking part.

For more information, please contact:

Natalie Quinn-Walker
PhD Researcher
n.quinn-walker@wlv.ac.uk

This study has been reviewed and approved by the University of Wolverhampton's Research Ethics Committee.